It looks, therefore, as if it was going to be the artillery horse of the future. TACTICAL EMPLOYMENT OF ARTILLERY. The great power of the pieces which are employed to-day, the mobility that the mechanical tractor imparts to them, and the stationary character of the struggle in the field, a circumstance which assists materially in securing accuracy of aim, are the reasons that the artillery plays such an important part, especially as it can count on adequate observations of the objects chosen for attack. If it is field artillery, it is employed to cooperate with the infantry as necessity may demand. The guns of medium and heavy caliber, are used to oppose an assault when circumstances permit, to demolish earthworks, shelters and communicating trenches, as well as to destroy the woods, villages, groups of buildings, etc. that may serve as points of support for the lines of the enemy, or to conceal the emplacement of their guns and batteries, to respond to the enemy's fire, and to ruin the roads in the rear with a view of blocking the immense traffic which an action renders necessary, to sweep the aviation grounds that may be within range, and finally to throw projectiles of great size at irregular and unexpected intervals into towns and settlements that are being used as headquarters stations, or for the cantonment of troops, and force them to bivouac; for the great camps, such as used to be established,...
