The commercial production of wheat in this area was begun by Gen. John Sutter in 1843, and until very recently the growing of wheat and barley by dryfarming methods has been the principal agricultural industry. The use of water for irrigation has developed slowly and has encountered a curious apathy, in contrast to the enthusiasm for reclamation by drainage. Because of a mild climate, a concentrated winter rainfall, and a shallow water table, many field crops and deep-rooted plants thrive without irrigation. Water is not a necessity; it only makes possible larger yields, the cultivation of crops with a higher return to the acre, and the cultivation of certain lands otherwise chiefly valuable for grazing. Such advantages have had little weight with owners of large holdings to whom the original cost of the land was small. However, the crowding in of home seekers from the East, the diminishing profits of grain farming, and the increase in land values have combined to bring about the subdivision and sale of many large parcels of land. To the purchasers of such tracts the advantages of irrigation appeal more strongly. The price of land is based on its anticipated value under irrigation and not on its value for dry farming. When subdivided, it is sold for two to three times its value for grain raising, and for many tracts the purchaser must provide the means of irrigation....
